

Project description

For industrial projects it is necessary to follow the detection system design directives of the manufacturer and to involve the know-how of the supplier. The supplier can make an analysis of the flame detection aspects of the project by means of a "project description". It thoroughly describes the application and gives a clear motivation of the detection choice. National engineering standard or directives and the standard EN54 part 10 are not suitable for flame detection in industrial applications.